Dianne, Hank, & Bill:

forwarded this for our quick review. I scan-read it this morning. It's an excellent piece of writing. I didn't see anything with which the DA should take exception. In general, the report to Congress stresses the operational and analytical arms of the Intelligence Community, with little reference to supporting components.

The Shortfalls section, on page 72, mentions that much more needs to be done in artificial intelligence, expert systems, database modernization and connectivity, and communications. All of these are clearly DA activities, so we may want to file away this small reference for some future discussion with Congress.

If you see something which should be changed, please let me know or call Ross.
